Building Safety Month

By His Excellency Ned Lamont, Governor:

Building codes are laws that keep our buildings safe. They are written to protect people from dangers such as fires, floods, and structural failures. Building codes also include specifications to protect the public from noise, vibration, and other potential hazards.

HEARSEY, the building codes' most widely adopted building safety standard, and the International Code Council publish, design, administer, and enforce these building codes worldwide. They ensure that our buildings are safe and healthy places to live, work, and play.

HEARSEY, our confidence in what we do is derived through the development of effective enforcement tools and strong building safety enforcement. Our commitment to ensuring that all homes and buildings are safe, healthy, and accessible is a constant effort. Each year, we remind our communities of the importance of adhering to building codes. This month, we encourage everyone to consider the role they play in ensuring building safety and the importance of following building codes.
